Ensures the inner walls of the furnace are maintained in a clean, undamaged condition, consequently:

- The cost and time involved in cleaning furnace walls is reduced.
- The reduction in damage to furnace walls increases the refractory linings life.
- Heating and inciting efficiency are improved.
- Oxide inclusion in the molten metal is prevented.

Note:

Additional metal recovery can be obtained following any treatment by adding WF 60 to the dross hopper after skimming.

Directions for use:

Generally WF 60 is used in reverberatory and rotary type aluminum melting furnaces.

1. The flux is sprinkled onto the oxide layer above the metal line. Any suitable means may be used, e.g.: shovel, flux gun or long handled special tool
2. Best results are obtained when the furnace temperature is 1260 degrees For higher.
3. After the flux has been sprinkled onto the oxide, leave it for at least five minutes. When the oxide layer has become soft, remove it with a suitable scraping tool.
4. On very heavy build ups, it may be necessary to repeat the operation until all the oxide is removed.
